SOURCE A

During Aurangzeb's reign he developed good relationships with foreign traders and made generous donations to several Hindu temples. He introduced restrictions on personal behaviour, for example he banned outdoor singing and dancing and made a declaration on the length of beards. Aurangzeb also increased taxes to pay for expensive wars and used large amounts of money to pay for luxurious buildings. According to some historians a number of these policies contributed to the increasing instability of the Mughal Empire by the time of Aurangzeb's death.
